The resalidar in command of them—a fine specimen of the Hindustani Mussulman—and backed up by some half-dozen equally brave men, rode out to the front. Lieutenant Watson singled out this fine-looking fellow, and attacked him. The resalidar presented his pistol at Lieutenant Watson's breast at a yard's distance, and fired; but most providentially without effect; the ball must, by accident, have previously fallen out. Lieutenant Watson ran the man through with his sword, and dismounted him; but the native officer, nothing daunted, drew his tulwar, and with his sowers renewed his attack upon Lieutenant Watson, who bravely defended himself until his own men joined in the melee, and utterly routed the party. In this rencontre, Lieutenant Watson received a blow on the head from a tulwar, another on the left arm, which severed his chain gauntlet glove, a tulwar cut on his right arm, which fortunately only divided the sieve of the jacket, but disabled the arm for some time; a bullet also passed through his coat, and he received a blow on his leg, which lamed him for some days afterwards.—Despatch from Major General Sir James Hope Grant, KCB, dated 10th January 1858. Served with the Eusofaie Field Force under Sir Neville Chamberlain in 1805 (Clasp). He was one of the foremost to enter, and was severely wounded in the breach. The Column was saved from a serious loss that would probably have resulted but for Captain Keatinge's knowledge of the small path leading across the ditch, which had been examined during the night by himself and a servant, who declined, when required, to lead the Column, without his master. Having cleared the breach, he led into the fort, where he was struck down by another dangerous wound.
